These people are supposed to SERVE this country, not treat it like a personal luxury for their own frivolous use.

There's no formal Secret Service policy prohibiting the use of a government helicopter for transporting a vice president's child to a local event, but former and current Secret Service supervisors agreed the request for a chopper for this purpose has no precedent. They told MS NOW that prior vice presidents eschewed using such expensive government perks for the convenience of their children's schedule, and agents typically drove children locally in sports

Babies who don't get the vitamin K shot are 81x more likely to develop a type of uncontrollable bleeding than those who do.

But no federal or state agencies track refusal rates or subsequent bleeding.

Following ProPublica's report, two lawmakers are demanding CDC action.

Recent reporting from ProPublica track vitamin K shot refusal, vitamin deficiency.

We write to urge the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to address the growing and preventable public health problem of deficiency bleeding (VKDB) among newborns and understand the burden of vitamin K deficiency bleeding information publicly available.

Two members of Congress are urging federal officials to monitor vitamin K shot refusals by parents and the potential consequences for their newborns, including severe bleeding or death.
